Core advantages:

	Passionate Design Agency	In-House Designer	Traditional Agency
Services covered	A broad spectrum of services, including branding, web design and development, UI/UX design, graphic design, motion graphics, and video production.	Limited to individual expertise	Typically offer a narrower scope of services and may specialize in specific areas like branding or digital marketing.
Talent quality	Top 0.5% of talent in each service area.	Varies	Varies, may not always guarantee top-tier expertise in all areas
Cost-effectiveness	Effectively equivalent to having an in-house design agency at the cost of the salary of a mid-level in-house designer.	Costs = Salary + recruitment costs + training costs + software and employment expenses, insurance, fees, and benefits.	Both hourly retainer-based and fixed quote pricing models tend to be significantly more expensive for the same output
Efficiency and turnaround time	Ability to juggle various tasks with 1-3 working days average ETA.	A more limited range of skills resulting in underutilised capacity with varying turnaround times.	Turnaround times can often be longer and less predictable depending on the agency's workload.
Integration and downtime	Ability to integrate with existing client workflows and begin working on tasks within a day of onboarding.	Takes time to train and onboard and requires management time to ensure quality.	Integration is often less flexible, and projects might experience more downtime due to rigid workflows and less adaptable processes.
Flexibility and scalability	Highly scalable with the ability to scale up or down, to cancel, and to restart anytime, with only a monthly commitment.	Often challenging, as it involves hiring or firing staff with the associated legal, emotional, cost, and time considerations.	Generally, work on a contractually bound project-by-project basis, and scaling up or down often means negotiating new contracts or finding additional agencies.
